frecando 4ac24d49bb . A: Asking for "help" with things I don't know how to do myself is very different from asking for help with things I don't know how to do myself. In the latter case, the question is clearly off-topic for Stack Overflow because it is a situation where a professional software engineer would need to teach the asker how to use their computer. However, as with any question, it might be on-topic for SU if the asker gives some more details about what they are trying to do and why it doesn't work. For example, if someone is trying to watch a Blu-ray, they might want to try asking on SuperUser. Or maybe someone is trying to download torrents, which is a topic for ServerFault. Maybe someone is trying to install some software that they don't know how to install. I don't think this problem is on-topic for Super User, because none of the answers to this question give any answer whatsoever. Instead, all of them give a list of free software applications that are perfectly adequate for the use case, in addition to links to other websites where there might be a software that would be better than what they have already tried. A: As with any question, it will depend on what it's about. If you're asking about converting HD videos to fit a particular movie, you're probably not asking about video conversion. If you're asking about downloading torrents, there's a very good chance that your question is off-topic here. If you're asking about installing a particular piece of software, then it's on topic here. However, your title doesn't really match the question, so someone with experience in the area may still close it if they feel it's not a fit.

Toxoplasma gondii (T. gondii) is an important coccidian parasite that can cause fatal infection in both immunocompetent and immunosuppressed individuals. The molecular basis of host cell invasion by T. gondii is still unclear, and few genes and signaling pathways have been identified as playing important roles in host cell invasion by this parasite. Here, we report that T. gondii invasion of host cells was markedly reduced in vitro by over-expression of a calreticulin-like protein (CRTL1) using a DNA construct. Moreover, CR
