Hot Topics: Naturists enthralled by 'Wild Wild West' By JENNIFER RING, jring@lowellsun.com Updated: 11/19/2012 07:16:49 AM EST

It's a costume party, but it's not like any costume party you've ever been to. Seventy-nine naturists and voyeurs were squirming in the aisles at Lowell's Orpheum Theatre on Saturday night, their natural hands exposed and their faces painted blue. As the curtain rose on the "Wild Wild West" musical, they were ready to take their clothes off and have a good time. The bare, nude fun didn't last long, however, as the audience's laughter and applause interrupted their passion play. As the curtain fell to end the musical's first act, the room was filled with people donning their clothes as fast as they could. From the day-long festivities leading up to the show and the rehearsals that preceded it, the audience was already familiar with what to expect. This production was a passion play, a one-act musical that came to the Orpheum last year and was so successful it was brought back to town in a big way. Four different couples perform in the musical, which was adapted from the 1940 film of the same name. The play consists of seven scenes, with the last five interspersed with musical numbers performed by the couples who play the roles of the people in the movie. For the bare-bottomed audiences, the play got off to a bare-footed start. As Elva, a scantily dressed prostitute, walked on stage to face off against the sheriff, who wanted to help her take down another of the town's brothels, the characters had to hold their fists to their genitals. Elva grabbed her white man's pants, which were hard to resist, as the audience laughed and applauded. Then the sheriff pulled them off, and the audience groaned. The first musical number, a sexy duet where 2d92ce491b
