The behavior of a particular traffic at the ingress of a network site (such as a Web page) can be of interest to a network administrator in order to understand potential problems with the network. For example, the network administrator may want to know how many concurrent requests are generated for a given site, whether the traffic is asymmetric (i.e., if the requests are more or less equally distributed between two parties), whether the traffic is under-utilized (i.e., if the site is not fully utilized), whether the requests are coming from a small number of parties, etc. However, a network administrator may find the number of requests to a site difficult to analyze when the number of requests may be greater than 100,000 per second. For example, there may be a very high volume of traffic to a single site, and the network administrator may not have the technical expertise to efficiently analyze the data. Consequently, the network administrator may not be able to analyze the traffic data to determine the number of concurrent requests, whether the traffic is asymmetric, whether the traffic is under-utilized, whether the traffic is from a small number of parties, etc. Cape Town - Business confidence in the Western Cape has dipped in 2016, while optimism in the Eastern Cape is said to have doubled, according to a new report. The state's Economic Competitiveness Index (ECI) shows optimism in the Western Cape has dipped from 55.6 to 51.8, while optimism in the Eastern Cape has increased from 41.8 to 62.5. The ECI is a measure of the competitiveness of the state's economy. The Western Cape saw the lowest growth in business confidence during the first quarter of 2016, and the largest decline in the Northern Cape (-11.9%), compared to last year. This was followed by the Free State (-8.3%) and KZN (-6.7%), as well as the Eastern Cape (62.5%), Mpumalanga (-10.2%), and Limpopo (-2d92ce491b
