This program is one of the most useful and favorite programs of many DJ's around the world. Development Based on the core philosophy of the Roland D-50 synthesizer, the Zebra was designed as a small, programmable analog synthesizer. The design of the synthesizer and its ease of use made it popular among new users of synthesizers.

The D-50 engine is available in three types. The original D-50 has four oscillators, eight envelope generators, one LFO, and a noise generator. A .5 version, the .3 version and the .5 version have three oscillators, eight envelope generators, and one LFO, and the .5 version has a noise generator. Its text user interface allows the user to control almost every aspect of the synthesizer. All parameters and settings can be modified via a compact, high-resolution graphical display. Most parameters and settings are presented in real time and can be modified while the synthesizer is playing. The Zebra can be used to play and compose in many styles, including organic, electronic, and rock. Zebra has many features similar to modern synthesizers, such as a comprehensive patch editor, 12-part multi-timbrality, and three oscillators that are grouped into three octaves. Polyphonic and monophonic sequences can be used. Each sequence can be individually modulated with pitch
