Category:HadithContents Pythian III is the third iteration of the original PI, which was first demonstrated by Steve Jobs back in 1990 at the original Macintosh launch. Pythian III was the most complex operating system yet, with the ability to run on both PowerPC and x86 hardware. It included several innovations in user experience and support for services such as music players, shopping malls, etc. But it was abandoned after a few years due to the increasing cost of licensing Apple's expensive Mac OS X, and was never re-released commercially. Although the original version of the OS (launched on Mac OS 7.5 in August 1999) was released on Apple's website for a few weeks at the end of 1999 (for testing purposes only), as of 2003 there was still no official release date for the OS. The original developer of the OS was Phil Schiller, who moved to NeXT and would later become Apple's vice president of worldwide product marketing and senior vice president of marketing. Phil Schiller was also responsible for developing Mac OS X, which was the flagship OS of Apple and a successor to the original PI.Q: Cannot import scipy.sparse.linalg I'm trying to use scipy.sparse.linalg to find the biggest eigenvalue of a diagonal matrix. It works fine in Jupyter but when I'm trying to use this code in my program it's not working. I'm using Python 3.7.0. import numpy as np from scipy.sparse.linalg import dpotri from scipy.sparse import csr_matrix from scipy.linalg import norm def dpotri(a, lower=False): """ Compute the product a * inv(a) """ if lower: a = a.T a_inv = a.copy() a_inv.T = a.T a_inv.A = 0 a_inv.dtype = np.complex128 a_r, a_i = a.copy() a_i = np.sqrt(a_i) a
