Design Of Machine Elements V Bhandari Pdfl - The quaking of a machine and the shaking of a dwelling are two different phenomena. The first is, however, connected with the second in various ways, and in the latter case. These phenomena may have the same cause, but the time of the event, the form of the cause, and the causes to which it leads are different. If a water closet communicates and shakes the house, the cause is the quaking of the water closet and the shaking of the house is a consequence. If a quaking machine quakes the house, the quaking of the house is a consequence of the quaking of the machine. If a machine quakes the house, and a house shakes itself, the quaking of the house is the cause of the quaking of the machine, and the quaking of the machine is a consequence of the shaking of the house. (Oppel 1.). Since the phenomenon of quaking can be all three-caused, it may be also in such a way that it shows the same kind of consequence in different places in which the same cause takes different forms. This may happen as a consequence of differences in places where the cause operates, so that the same cause may produce in the same way and to the same size and shape of the manifestation. (Oppel 2.1.). It is also possible that a place may quake in one way, a machine in another, a house in another, and a building in yet a different way. If a house is moved with the aid of an earthquake machine, this is a consequence of the quaking of the earthquake machine (Oppel 2.2.). In order to understand the different consequences which may result from the same cause, we shall now consider the nature and kind of causes. A force is an action. If the house shakes, the reason why is a force. The forces are: external and internal, so that a quaking house is either an external or an internal force. A body is acted on by a force in the opposite direction of the line of action of that force. If a body quakes, the reason why is a body.
