PHOTOGRAPHY IS A GIMMICK?

After watching the recent documentary, Revolution how the world got to the point where we have such a vast number of talented photographers with digital cameras (an estimated 2.5 billion), and a vast number of inexpensive, easy to learn, and multi-functional image editing applications, I was left with one question: "What are our next steps in photography?" It is my belief that modern photography is still in its adolescence as far as tools are concerned. We all know that a real artist can do something with practically nothing, but a real photographer needs great tools. In most cases, they're expensive and complicated to use. The basics of manipulation in a raster-based program are really quite simple. Most of the techniques needed to "clean up" an image are pretty much the same that you would use to improve any "natural" image, like clothes, furniture, abstract art, etc. Photoshop is designed to simplify the image cleanup process by giving you choices of many different techniques for just about any problem you're likely to encounter. The big boys of editing are becoming less complicated and increasingly easy to use. What we're seeing is the beginning of a "revolution" in the world of photography. The impact of the Internet and the ease with which digital images can be manipulated is already changing the world of photography, and if you're a regular reader of this magazine, you know that it's also changing this magazine. I realize, however, that we're all very "newbie" at this game yet. So I have written this course as a gentle introduction to Photoshop for those of you who are either just starting to use this program, or who have been using it but feel like they could stand to be taught a few things they don't already know. Just like football, or basketball, or just about any other sport, learning the basics takes time, and this course should take you through the fundamentals with about 1-2 hours of instruction per chapter, or about 60-90 minutes of video. * * * WOULD YOU LIKE TO KNOW MORE? If you'd like to gain a deeper understanding of how Photoshop works, here's a brief list of tips to help

What's New in the Adobe Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.3.1)?

A change in the way Scotland's newspapers deliver their content, including adding digital sections to their print editions, is likely to add to the financial pressure being felt by local newspapers, according to the Scottish Affairs Select Committee. Written answers given to the committee raised concerns over the future of the industry in Scotland, ahead of Thursday's launch of the Scottish Newspaper Consortium (SNC) – a new model being put forward by the Scottish press to provide universal access to the widest range of digital newspaper articles, as well as affordable home delivery. Procedures to create the new consortium are currently being finalised by trade secretary Andrea Leadsom and her cabinet colleagues. Committee chairwoman Kirsty Blackman said the Scottish Newspapers Committee wanted to establish whether print newspapers were “overdue for restructuring” and whether the Scottish Government's proposals would provide a “healthy environment for the newspaper industry”. She added: “We are concerned that the move towards a wider range of digital content could hamper free access to print newspapers and impact the quality of journalism in Scotland. “The sustainability of print newspapers is difficult to determine. While print newspaper circulations continue to fall, digital readership is growing, albeit at a slower rate than newspaper revenue. “The consortium model is an idea which has been put forward and debated, but the models are yet to be finalised. They are not cheap or fast to establish. “The Scottish Government understands the importance of the news industry to Scotland’s future, and are keen to help an industry that is one of the most effective and sustainable in the world. “Scottish councils have been able to fund a number of the cost associated with delivery, so we would be keen to see this government continue to support efforts to establish this consortium, helping where possible to build up an effective system.” Last year, Alex Salmond’s government pumped £1.4 million into setting up the SNC, funded by councils and other public authorities. By comparison, Glasgow’s evening daily, the Times, has a yearly budget of £2.3 million – a figure which has dropped by nearly a third since the paper was first launched in 2008, under the last Labour government. Diversity among Scottish newspapers has been hit by falling sales in recent years, which has seen the closure of 50 local titles since 2015, with more to
