It looks like your problem might be related to your ISP's traffic shaping. If you do a Google search for "jungjing downloader", and click the first result, that will take you to a description of how to download files by using the FFmpeg downloader and how that will solve your problem. Q: Opening and reading from a binary file I am making a program that contains a binary file. The program reads the binary file and shows the numbers that are in the binary file. The file has 10 different numbers in it and I need to read each value from the binary file and then print that value. It's something like this: 4 1 2 3 4 8 6 4 9 4 The program should then go to the next line in the binary file and read the next line of numbers. I know how to store numbers in a binary file and how to open a file. But I don't know how to do it using just C. I hope you can help me. A: Here's a generic way of reading binary files. You didn't say which compiler you're using, so I used GCC in this example but any compliant C compiler should work fine. I am also assuming that all the data is actually numbers, which is not true, but you could modify the code if you want to treat the numbers as strings. #include typedef unsigned char byte; int main() { int i, size; byte* buffer = NULL; /* Open the file, read the number of bytes, and allocate the buffer that we will use for storing the numbers. / FILE in = fopen("binary.bin", "rb"); if (in == NULL) { printf("fopen() failed.
