Turkey's president Recep Tayyip Erdogan marked the first anniversary of the failed coup attempt by attempting to silence the people he sees as responsible for the uprising with an announcement on Wednesday that 15,000 people involved in the coup were sentenced. Turkey accuses American-based cleric Fethullah Gulen of orchestrating the failed military coup of July 15, 2016. The government has linked Gulen with mass purges, corruption and the Fethullahist Terrorist Organization (FETO), a group Ankara describes as terror organization and which the US considers "a threat to global security." Thursday, March 23, 2017 Turkey's president Recep Tayyip Erdogan marked the first anniversary of the failed coup attempt by attempting to silence the people he sees as responsible for the uprising with an announcement on Wednesday that 15,000 people involved in the coup were sentenced. To mark the occasion, Turkish authorities carried out widespread purges following the coup, firing tens of thousands of people from their jobs. Turkey has detained nearly 50,000 people, including military and government officials on suspicion of treason. It has also arrested, stripped and suspended more than 150,000 other people suspected of links to the coup plotters. Speaking to reporters in Istanbul, Erdogan spoke glowingly about the President, whom he called his "friend and ally," and who, he said, "is perfect in all respects." He said that during the 18-month rule of the Islamist AK Party, a justice and development platform led by Erdogan's party, the Turkish economy had grown at a rate of "tens of percent annually." The Turkish president, however, failed to mention that the real growth rates of the Turkish economy were decreasing at a rate of almost one percent per year, although continuing to increase in small terms. The export sector, once a very positive aspect of the Turkish economy, has seen its growth plunge in recent years. Erdogan also failed to mention that the Turkish economy has been hit by the collapse of global markets and the end of cheap borrowing. In an interview on Tuesday with AI- 09e8f5149f
