What's New in the?

Description: Once again, it's a post-Christmas kind of month, with all sorts of awesome and not-so-awesome news items making headlines. Google has revealed that they're testing out yet another new feature that's going to be added to Gmail, i.e. timeline view. While we are yet to see a YouTube-style timeline view, we can expect the feature to be adopted by all Google services in the near future. Remember how Facebook is planning to use your inbox to promote your messages? Well, this week, the social networking giant unveiled a new feature called "Get Started" that sends your friends messages about the new tools, even if you haven't asked them to see your messages. The feature is expected to be introduced in the future, when Facebook users will see a new "Get Started" button in their inboxes. While the company hasn't mentioned the exact timeline of the arrival of this feature, a source has indicated that Facebook has been testing the feature for the past couple of months. According to the source, the company has also been working on the features to tweak the design of the inbox and implement more messages in the first place. Facebook is definitely going to make it a point to make the inbox of its users a better place with the introduction of "Get Started", and we are sure it will also update the look of the inbox and make it more interactive. The social network has started testing the new update for the past couple of months. According to the source, the company has been working on the features to tweak the design of the inbox and implement more messages in the first place. Back in 2012, Facebook launched Instant personalization which is still available on its website. The feature allows you to see what your friends are sharing on the social network, right away, and the new feature is going to be the same, but even better. According to the source, this feature is going to get "a little bit" smarter. The company is going to be better at figuring out what users are searching for and suggest the queries to the users, instantly. Facebook has tested the feature in the past and was satisfied with the results, but it hasn't been pushed out to users yet. It looks like the company is going to start working on the feature in the coming days. Just when the whole world was enjoying the joy of Christmas, Facebook has introduced a new feature for its users, i.e. Timeline view. Timeline is an old feature that the social networking site has made a comeback with. While Facebook users couldn't create a new timeline and post messages to their friends until the company rolled out the feature for its users, users who didn't know what this feature
