The most common complication of gastroschisis is necrotizing enterocolitis, but other, atypical conditions may also occur. We reviewed a series of 31 patients with gastroschisis to determine the frequency and characteristics of unusual conditions that complicated the postnatal care of patients with gastroschisis. We examined medical records, operative and follow-up notes, hospital case-records, and the medical literature from 1979 to 2006. The largest single series of gastroschisis reported in the literature was reviewed. Patients were followed prospectively after birth for at least 12 months. Thirty-one of the 39 gastroschisis cases (79%) included in this series had associated intestinal injury. Sixteen (51%) had necrotizing enterocolitis, 9 (29%) had severe bacterial sepsis, 4 (13%) had mesenteric ischemia, and 1 (3%) had extensive small bowel ischemia. Twenty-eight of the patients (90%) died; 21 of these deaths were attributed to complications of the intestinal injury. The only survivors of the 28 deaths had the intestinal damage repaired within 72 hours of birth. Intestinal injury complications should be considered in all gastroschisis cases. Children with gastroschisis are at a high risk for developing necrotizing enterocolitis, which is a severe, life-threatening disease. All cases with intestinal injury should be managed to prevent death.Cardiac arrhythmias can result from multiple congenital heart diseases in a single patient. While some patient factors such as hypertrophic obstructive cardiomyopathy (HOCM) or congenital long QT syndrome can affect the mechanism

The present invention relates to a method of and apparatus for unidirectional sealing on metallic parts, the apparatus including a moveable sealing element, and an applicator disposed at a distance from the sealing element, the applicator being adjustable to seal on the surface of the part, and a support member against which the applicator can be pressed by a pressing element. Sealing apparatuses of this type are known, for example, from German Patent Specification No. 2,066,072 and Austrian Patent Specification No. 333,883. In the known devices, the sealing element consists of a squeegee or an aluminum blade with a special shape; when used in combination with an anvil, the blade can be moved in a rectilinear manner against the surface to be sealed. Because such blades can only be moved in a rectilinear manner, portions of the surface of a part to be sealed, for example a cylindrical part, cannot be uniformly sealed. This drawback can be partly overcome by the embodiment disclosed in Austrian Patent Specification No. 333,883. There, a blade-like sealing element can be pivoted about the axis of a pressing screw by means of an adjusting screw, a pivoting lever is attached to the blade by means of a pivot pin, the pivoting lever having an edge cam by which the sealing element is pressed onto the surface 3e33713323
