Designing exogenous retroviral vectors for gene delivery to human T cells. One of the major obstacles to the clinical application of gene therapy is the low frequency of transduced cells in vivo and, in particular, the lack of transduction of CD4(+) T cells in vivo. To design a vector of the type that will permit efficient CD4(+) T cell transduction, we examined the efficiency of various retroviral vectors for transduction of CD4(+) T cells. With a variety of vectors, T cells generated in vitro with anti-CD3/CD28 and CD4/CD8-depleted cells were less than 4% transduced. Moreover, only 6% of T cells were transduced in vivo, and transduction of T cells in the draining lymph nodes was negligible. Transduction of T cells in vivo was dependent on expression of the CD8 alpha (beta) chain and was maximal (36% of cells) in the presence of rIL-2. Vector selection was important for efficient transduction in vivo; vectors containing the AXL5 promoter generated 3-fold higher transduction levels in vivo than vectors with the MMLV promoter. We also demonstrate, for the first time, that exogenous retroviral vectors can be used to transduce human T cells in vivo. Hello my friend, I'm so happy you found your way here, and I'm very happy to hear you've been feeling better. You just shouldn't look to others for happiness, in fact it's absolutely fine to be feeling as horrible as you are, we have plenty of people here who enjoy the venting, and so you don't have to compare yourself to them in order to feel better. See I've been there too, I've been down on the edge of an entire life. I began to lose my grip and my mind just was not telling me what was going on anymore, and if I read this site or looked to any others for advice, it's likely I would have kept running the way I was going, not being able to see where I was going. But I started to feel better, and I guess I just now have the same sensation you are feeling, that your mind will not tell you what is going on, and you have to do it yourself. In the end it was a matter of time, and when you become comfortable with yourself, things will stop becoming a mystery to you, and you'll be able to ask for help and seek others study is that the authors did not look for peritoneal factors, such as adhesions, which could have impacted the outcomes. Other limitations of our study include the retrospective nature of the design and the limited number of patients included in the study. Conclusions ===== We conclude that when compared with initial laparoscopy, conversion to laparotomy following TML significantly increases the risk for major intra-abdominal complications. The trend of increasing conversion rate from laparoscopy to laparotomy during the different phases of the learning curve is demonstrated in our study. TML is associated with less mortality, shorter LOS, and similar POPF rates, as compared with initial laparoscopic surgery. Conversion is associated with increased complication and death rates and longer LOS. We strongly believe that quality outcomes are associated with improved efficiency and effectiveness of a surgical technique. The key for surgeons to perform TML is to choose the right patients and the right surgeon, with an appropriate volume of experience. TML should be considered as a quality indicator for surgical outcomes, and potential treatment superiority should be demonstrated. Abbreviations ===== APACHE-II: Acute physiology and chronic health evaluation version II; BMI: Body mass index; CAPD: Continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis; CI: Confidence interval; CRP: C-reactive protein; DFI: Disease-free interval; EBL: Estimated blood loss; IQR: Interquartile range; LOS: Length of stay; PCT: Procalcitonin; POD: Postoperative day; POPF: Postoperative pancreatic fistula; RR: Risk ratio; TML: Transgastric minimally invasive surgery.
