Q: SQL Server Exclusion in view gets No rows selected when used as source I have a problem that is only happening in one of my applications where when used as source for a view, I get No rows selected. The only way I could make it work is to comment out the select statement from that view definition and even then, I can't make it work every time. The error says: "No rows selected" for the link, while the red arrow shows the reference to that link As per the image, the view definition is stored in a data dictionary, with "Allow creation of view, stored procedure, or function" enabled. The view is only created when data is inserted to the table (below) and the values are checked against in the view. There are a few other views defined in the same schema, but even when I disable their creation on insert, I get the same error message. I verified that the view exists and is valid by creating it from inside the data dictionary and it works. The select statement makes no difference, if the table is selected or if there's a join or a sub-select. The view has no unique or clustered index The data in the table has a row count in the billions The table have some unique indexes and other constraints - there's nothing unique in the view, only the table. Any idea what's going on or what I could try out to get the app to run? A: The app was behaving strange, but as I was able to reproduce it, in the view the records were being deleted. Q: Cardinality of V_α Note: I am studying for a test and these are my notes. Problem: Let V be a transitive class and let κ be a cardinal such that $2^{\kappa} = \kappa^+$. Prove that κ is inaccessible. My
