HyperMotion Technology in FIFA 22 Using motion capture data from actual players, “HyperMotion Technology” is expected to make players’ AI behave in more realistic ways, more powerfully and more accurately than before. This is done by capturing real-life movement during a match. Real-life movement data collected from matches is used to give the AI in the game a sense of emotion by allowing the AI to change their decisions based on the speed, direction and intensity of a player’s movement or tackle. This also impacts players’ decisions. AI captains use more caution when the speed or intensity of a player’s movements or tackles matches the data collected from their particular player. “You look at a midfielder and a winger, and you put them in the middle of a match, and you should expect them to make decisions that make sense for the players on the field,” said David Rutter, Executive Producer on FIFA. “But we’re adding intention to the AI. We’re making the AI put themselves in the players’ shoes, and we’re making the AI think like they’re making decisions about how to play the match. It’s more emotional, more decision-making, and it will make the AI players feel more realistic.” For example, a “player in full flight” in a game has to move their arms at a certain height and speed for their AI to attempt to stop them. The AI player will also attempt to cut off the opposition players to regain possession of the ball. Some of the most complex and most tactical decisions FIFA has ever made will take place in FIFA 22, which is due out later this year. On-field abilities FIFA 22 introduces the newest FIFA Ultimate Team card set, Defenders of the Champions. This new card set introduces brand-new Ultimate Team abilities, skills, attributes and behaviours, which means that players in Ultimate Team mode can earn and use collectible cards to earn attributes, which can be earned by spending FIFA Points. “Defenders of the Champions” – Introduces new micro-defensive cards, which can be used to earn attributes, and in turn have an effect on your team’s defensive and attacking play. – Introduces new micro-defensive cards, which can be used to earn attributes, and in turn have an effect on your team♦
