The advancements in player movement are particularly impactful during dribbling and passing as players' movements during these actions are represented more realistically. The data is also utilised by the game engine to create authentic ball skills, allowing for more realistic passes, touches, kicks and shots on goal. Physiognomic Player Attributes During Dribbling and Passing While player animation and performance have been made more realistic with Superstar Players, training and gameplay physics have been made more realistic with increased accuracy in the game engine. Players' performance, appearance, speed and balance have been developed for more realistic gameplay. "We made many changes, such as the shooting accuracy, chances of shot repelling, accuracy during headers and chips, dribbling and evading control, slide tackles, and more."• EA SPORTS President Andrew Wilson. Players' behaviors and reactions to the ball and players around them have been improved to be more consistent with real-life scenarios. "The touches players make when running with the ball are more realistic. Players can touch the ball and bounce it with their lower body before giving it to a teammate."• FIFA Club Brand Director Ignacio Pons. "The game engine more accurately reflects how players in real life move and react. Players are more assertive when they win a ball and push for control when the game is in their favour."• FIFA Club Brand Director Ignacio Pons. The game engine can accurately predict how a player will move during open-field runs and ensure that the player animations are aligned with where they are on the pitch. The reactive behaviour of players when players are winning and losing the ball is more realistic. Players are also more likely to track back and assist their teammates on defense when the play switches to a different side of the field. During the advanced gameplay tests for FIFA 22, the engine improved the player's tactics and behaviors when in defensive and offensive situations and when a player was losing the ball. These new behaviors included the player moving towards the ball when in a more crowded area, the player dropping back when under pressure, the player getting back to cover an area when the player is not on the ball and the player becoming more assertive and controlled when they have the ball. Players Move Tougher during Open-field Runs Players feel more physical and dirty when they are running at speed during open-field tackles. Players will also
